Society Set Makes Summer Plans

By MILDRED MARSHALL KOONCE.

QUESTIONS of summer residences and summer pastimes arise early in smart circles around the Capital and assume a large degree of importance in the first weeks of April. Uncertain at best, the Washington climate has a disconcerting way of sliding into summer on the very heels of the coolest, crispest, and rainiest spring, and the smart household which is not prepared to transfer to summer quarters is neither foresighted nor fashionable. Then, too, those who find it more convenient to lease than to buy, are always at the disadvantage of selecting a desirable summer estate against a host of other applicants and awaiting the completion of the necessary improvements to suit a critical and individual taste.

So the Capital goes a-house-hunting early every spring, a custom which has almost become a rite, and aside from affording a pleasant out-of-town vacation, insures a comfortable sense of preparedness against the performances of a capricious climate. The embassies and legations are usually first to go when the tide of summer travel swings away from the Capital, and their selections are made much earlier. Establishing an embassy with its various important connections, in summer quarters is a far greater task than transferring an individual menage, just as securing a residence at the shore, or in the mountains, suitable to ambassadorial dignity and requirements, is no small accomplishment.

Beginning with the Chief Executive, the diplomatic and official worlds are busily making their selections for the summer season. The President and Mrs. Wilson plan, of course, to occupy Shadow Lawn. If Congress adjourns and the President is enabled to leave town under the slackening pressure of affairs of state, the White House menage will probably be established at the beautiful Jersey estate early in the season. In the case of Congress remaining in session, the Chief Executive will do doubt spend the week-ends there and enjoy such brief vacations as the state of official affairs will permit. There have been rumors that the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. McAdoo will have a summer home near Shadow Lawn this season; at any rate the Secretary has disposed of the North Shore residence which they occupied last summer. No doubt the return of the official party from Buenos Aires will be followed by an announcement of the McAdoo's summer plans, since it is safe to assume that little Miss Ellen Wilson McAdoo will not be permitted to remain in town very long after the warm season has opened. Even her attractive "window box apartment" would soon grow unpleasant in the late spring sunlight.

For the fourth summer, the Russian Ambassador and Mme. Bakmeteff have chosen Newport for the summer embassy. They have leased again the handsome Stone Villa in Bellevue avenue and expect to establish the embassy staff there early in June. Prince von Hatzfeldt-Trachenberg, counselor of the German Embassy, has leased the Bender, Cowles, and Graham houses at Rye, N. Y., for the summer months. The Bender and Cowles houses, which are in Apawamis avenue, will be used as residences by Prince von Hatzfeldt and ten secretaries, while the Graham house will be converted temporarily into offices. Among the first of the diplomatic corps to leave the Capital (though not for the summer) are the Italian Ambassador and Countess Celere who have chosen Hot Springs as a pleasant and restful spring resort and will remain there until the end of the season.

Some official and residential folk are already leaving for their country places. Senator and Mrs. Shields and Miss Jeanette Cowan have gone to their country place in Tennessee, where Mrs. Shields and Miss Cowan will spend several months before going to the Pacific Coast for the late summer. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Glover are now at Westover, their country estate near Washington; they have leased the

The bride wore a lovely gown of pink Georgette crepe over cloth of silver, with a becoming picture hat of black tulle.

Later Mr. and Mrs. McKaig left for a wedding trip. Mrs. McKaig wearing a smart tailored gown of navy blue serge trimmed with braid and a hat of blue straw with trimming of ostrich
